The Lodger sessions were among Bowie's most experimental, with Brian Eno playing a key role in encouraging new ways of playing. One method was Oblique Strategies, the deck of cards he co-created which were intended to stimulate creativity. During the 'Boys Keep Swinging' session, one of the cards - "Use Unqualified People" - led to the band swapping instruments.

"Boys Keep Swinging" is Bowie taking on the Village People, with an irony far beyond the double-entendres of "YMCA" or "In the Navy." There's never a knowing aside, never a line sung with a wink: Bowie sells his pitch in his "Golden Years" croon, with a joyful bellow on " luck just kissed you HELLO! " while he gives the crude line "life is a pop of the cherry" some ...
