The turn-of-the-century tenement that Harpo later called (in his autobiography Harpo Speaks!) "the first real home I can remember" was populated with European immigrants, mostly artisans—which even included a glass blower. Just across the street were the oldest brownstones in the area, owned by people like David L. Loew and William Orth.

Harpo Speaks! - The Marx Brothers

Harpo Speaks! Entertaining storytelling from a legend. I was a little disappointed that he spent little time on discussing work with the Marx Brothers and more on the Algonquin Club, but I did walk away with an appreciation for who is probably one of the nicest entertainers (and human beings) of his time.
